

As a flight attendant for a major airline, I am extremely concerned about cell phones being used in flight. It's scary enough when you have someone acting suspiciously on your flight, but now they could be discussing some plan with another passenger to take over the aircraft, or letting someone in the aft of the aircraft know that the flight deck door will be opening soon, to start walking towards the front. Also, can you imagine the tension of passengers when someone wants to sleep, but the person sitting next or behind them wants to talk on the phone, and no one just talks, they have to yell? Also, why have we never allowed passengers to even have their cell phone turned on because it might interfere with navigational equipment, and now EVERYONE can have it on, and transmit? In case of an emergency, or planned emergency, can you imagine people making phone calls instead of listening to vital information that the flight attendants are trying to provide? Please, please, don't allow cell phones to be used.
